About the project:

Newark Dances seeks to create a multidisciplinary/collaborative performance art project based on a local mural titled "The Reflective Black Body" by Layqua Nuna Yawa. The mural will be used as a starting point for inspiration. This project will reflect the choreographic vision of two New Jersey based dancers/choreographers, and the directorial vision of videographer Ryan Arnez Monroe, and the musical talent of violinist Najee Williams, combined with the overall production leadership from visual artist, former contemporary dancer and Newark Dances director, Monifa Kincaid.

The idea is to create a choreographed dance work that is inspired by the mural "The Reflective Black Body" by Layqua Nuna Yawar as a thematic starting point; concurrently, videographer Ryan Arnez Monroe will create a short film focused on the intimate perspective between the dancers, the flow of movement and music, all the while weaving in a visual narrative of the overall theme of a reflective black body. The music by violinist Najee Williams will be created as a reaction to this dynamic flow of movement as it develops during the choreographic process.
