Judson Church

Brooklyn-based collaborators Miranda Brown + Noa Rui-Piin Weiss investigate the intersection of choreography, absurdity, and internet culture. In !!simon says~~!);))$ $ they follow instructions and they fail at following instructions. They write: "We are described. We are indescribable. We steal the Declaration of Independence. We face our fears on the dance floor. We leave with no fears."

Vessels, created by Nattie Trogdon + Hollis Bartlett, is a work of memory and from memory—part fantastical dream state and part mundane maneuver. Two performers draw on a shared archive of material from pop culture, bodily memory, and instinctual responses, blurring the legibility of their embodied histories and personal desires. Distorting and repeating these forms, however horrific or ecstatic, in the pursuit of something that feels like transformation or preservation or simply just aliveness. Vessels is a dance of desperate meanings unraveling into some queer itch that feels like home.
