Alla Kovgan's CUNNINGHAM makes elegant use of 3D technology to bring to life the work of legendary choreographer and dancer, Merce Cunningham (1919-2009) in this, his centennial year. Not unlike Wim Wenders's approach to Pina Bausch, the film embraces 3D to great effect, featuring stunning excerpts from iconic Cunningham dances, performed by the last generation of his dancers. On camera, some of his original acolytes (notably Carolyn Brown) accompany archival footage that features Merce, composer John Cage (his partner in life as well as in creation), and their collaborator Robert Rauschenberg who designed costumes, sets, and lighting for such dances as Interscape, Summerspace, and Crises. CUNNINGHAM is a thrilling tribute to a man The New York Times described in his final years as "the world's greatest living choreographer" and the "American modern dance equivalent of Nijinsky." – Alastair Macaulay

Judson Arts continues the long tradition of arts ministry at Judson Memorial Church, a spiritual force in Greenwich Village for over 120 years, devoted to creative freedom, social justice, and progressive faith. From the acclaimed Judson Poets' Theater and Judson Dance Theater to today's Judson Arts programming, Judson embraces the necessity of art in our lives and nurtures an uncensored environment for innovative expression, considering all artists potential modern-day prophets who show us where we've been, who we are, and what we can become.

Movement Research is one of the world's leading laboratories for the investigation of dance and movement-based forms. Movement Research strives to reflect the cultural, political and economic diversity of its moving community, including artists and audiences alike.

Film Forum is NYC's leading nonprofit cinema for independent film premieres and repertory programming. Their success is evidenced by their nearly 50-year tenure, during which their programs and fiscal resources have grown steadily. international array of films that treat diverse social, political, historical and cultural realities. Unlike commercial cinemas that primarily "book" high-grossing, Hollywood films, Film Forum's programs are thoughtfully selected, with attention to unique cinematic qualities, historical importance individually or within a genre and – particularly for documentaries – relevance to today's world.
