This month's topics cover developments in pandemic-era legislation, proposed visa petition changes, funding opportunities from the National Endowment for the Arts, and career support for immigrant artists.

End of Federal Public Health Emergency

On May 11, 2023, the U.S. will end the national emergency and Public Health Emergency \(PHE\) declarations that have been in place since early 2020. The repercussions will be widespread—especially for people who use public support programs like Medicare, Medicaid, and CHIP—impacting access to testing and treatment as well as legislation tied to these declarations. The end of the emergency will also stop Title 42, the order that quickly expelled people trying to enter the U.S. This will also divert resources away from efforts to address issues like long COVID, unequal access to ventilation, and fraud in public emergency programs.

U.S. Department of Homeland Security Proposed Rule to Increase Visa Filing Fees

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) recently issued a proposed rule to increase O and P artist visa filing fees as well as additional policy changes to limit the number of beneficiaries per petition and potentially extend visa processing times. The fee increases for U.S. petitioners are upwards of 250% and include a $600 surcharge intended to fund the asylum program. The proposed rule would place an added financial and logistical burden on both international artists and U.S. arts organizations, and would negatively impact communities supported by the performing arts sector. Members of the public are invited to respond and submit comments until the March 6, 2023 deadline, after which DHS and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) anticipate taking several months to review public feedback and consider adjustments.

Reinstating the Employee Retention Tax Credit Program

The Employee Retention Tax Credit (ERTC) program, enacted in March 2020, provided millions of dollars to the business community, nonprofit sector, and arts and cultural sector to bring back and retain employees amid hardships caused by the pandemic. However, the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act, enacted in November 2021, eliminated this funding for the 4th quarter of 2021—funding that many organizations were counting on. There was bi-partisan legislation during the last Congress to retroactively reinstate the ERTC, which will now need to be reintroduced for consideration so that the arts and cultural sector can continue to serve communities across the nation.

Funding Opportunities from the National Endowment for the Arts

The National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) is currently accepting applications for funding through two programs applicable to eligible dance projects and organizations.

The Grants for Arts Projects program for organizations provides project-based funding to support opportunities for public engagement with the arts and arts education, for the integration of the arts with strategies promoting the health and well-being of people and communities, and for the improvement of overall capacity and capabilities within the arts sector. The next deadline for 2024 dance projects is July 6, 2023.

Challenge America offers support primarily to small organizations for projects in all artistic disciplines that extend the reach of the arts to underserved groups/communities with rich and dynamic artistic and cultural contributions to share. With an abbreviated application and a robust structure for technical assistance, this program is considered a good entry point for organizations that are new to applying for federal funding. The deadline for 2024 projects is April 27, 2023.

NYFA Immigrant Artist Survey

New York Foundation for the Arts (NYFA) is designing one-on-one arts career support for immigrant artists, which would include 30-40 minute online Zoom sessions for immigrant artists of all disciplines/types in languages other than English. NYFA is conducting a survey to ascertain what these sessions should cover and to better understand priorities for immigrant artists' creative practice and well-being. If you are an immigrant artist interested in these sessions, complete the survey to share your feedback so that the program is guaranteed to serve you effectively.

Survey respondents can enter a lottery to receive a free 40-minute individual consultation session with NYFA staff.
