NewBrese Dance project is a New York City based physical contemporary dance company directed by Rachel Calabrese and Sawyer Newsome. Their work explores the ideas of character development and narrative as a means to showcase the complexity of interpersonal relationships. They enjoy researching how to showcase this through momentum based movement and collaboration with their dancers. Partnering and physical floorwork is at the forefront of their movement vocabulary- researching how to move through these in both high intensity states and flow states. They are also interested in depicting a warped sense of reality within their work - playing with how they can make themselves and the audience feel like they are losing all sense of time and space. 'In Which We Find Ourselves' explores these ideas. The company has presented work since 2020 throughout New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Wisconsin, and Utah.
