An intergenerational site-based work made for the 225-acre Evergreens Cemetery, Archaea for the Evergreens uses text, movement, landscape and music to weave together abstract, spiritual and scientific ideas surrounding life and death. Drawing connections between formal explorations of circles, physical embodiments of history, lessons learned from the way the natural world deals with death and the mysterious aspects of our universe, Archaea for the Evergreens calls forth the questions that arise when confronted with the vastness of time and space that the Evergreens offers. The term Archaea refers to the microorganisms that create the underlying structure on this planet to which everything is connected, just as the Evergreens Cemetery reminds us of both the connectedness and mystery of our world.
