As one of the dance field's most respected writers and teachers, Deborah Jowitt first emerged as a dancer and choreographer and in 1967 started to write a weekly dance column for The Village Voice. Two collections of her reviews have been published, along with her "Time and the Dance Image" and her biography of Jerome Robbins. She currently posts her critical writing at artsjournal.com/dancebeat/. Winner of many awards, Deborah Jowitt has stood firm at a time when dance criticism has dwindled or been excised from many of our newspapers and periodicals. Her story is one of endurance and love for the art form.

"Dance is ephemeral; it doesn't hang about on walls to be revisited or wait by your bed with a bookmark in it.... a dance flows along like a slippery, shimmering fish; words can't capture it, only, with luck, convey something of its essence." – Deborah Jowitt

The sharing of stories, memories, anecdotes, and dance form the special tapestry that is a From the Horse's Mouth production. Rare film footage, videos and multimedia will enhance this edition of From the Horse's Mouth unique blend of movement and storytelling.
