Launch Movement Experiment's latest experiment features an improvised collaboration of lighting, sound, and movement. Unfettered by prescriptive notions, the work is an immediate, spontaneous composition. It is action without pre-planning. Each moment, the performers consider their external and internal dreams, allowing hidden narratives to emerge. In the forms and fractures of this work, we see ourselves. Lighting by Andy Dickerson. Moves by Rachel Mckinstry. Sound by Layton Weedeman.

This musical/physical/vocal exposure of the present moment reveals what we've known all along – nothing happens for a reason. Next to nothing, there's always something clamoring to exist. In this fully improvised performance, Second Nature's Triad Without Title, distinctly evolved narratives dovetail with intricately ferocious dances. Songs avalanche out of sound and morph into gestural architectures with a keen ear for broken rhythms and altered states of mind. Will-o'-the-wisp moment is made flesh in the company's ongoing exploration of physical immediacy and the poetic supernatural, with a real-as-your-hometown comic flare. Performed by Cassie Tunick, Heather Harpham, and Danny Tunick.
