Today the significance of intimate, public, and digital spaces extends beyond their physical or digital boundaries. The way we construct and utilize these spaces has a profound influence on our mental and physical well-being, our perception of reality, and our perception and experience of 'freedom'. Araujo and Kostic want to examine the loss of space for sub-cultures under the influence and power of the consumer culture and mass media. When is content a positive addition and when is it a pollution?

"[RE]defining[SPACE]" invites us to critically examine how our perception of reality is shaped by the spaces we inhabit. By challenging the boundaries between intimate, public, and digital spaces, we question the existing power structures that reinforce inequality and exclusion. Through artistic interventions, we seek to disrupt the status quo and envision a future where spaces are designed to promote social cohesion, equity, and well-being.

[RE]defining [SPACE] is an immersive three-day performance series inviting audiences to reflect on the transformative power of space and envision alternative possibilities. Each night of the event serves as a platform for artists to explore the intersection of space, evolving identities, and well-being through various artistic disciplines.
