Writing for Immersive/Experiential Theater Workshop

Zoom Workshops w/ Zach Morris

Thursdays 7 - 10:00 pm ET May 15, 22, 29, June 5

$300 for 4 Sessions

ON ZOOM

Creating scripts and scenes for immersive/experiential performance is, in some ways, a fundamentally different endeavor than writing for more traditional stage or screen projects. Explore the questions and considerations that arise when creating coherent, compelling scripted material without a fourth wall.

In this four-part workshop, participants will look at techniques that come into play when script-writing for immersive theater, trying out ways to convey narrative, thematic, and dramatic action while simultaneously creating invitations for audience participation. In a welcoming, warm, and relaxed Zoom atmosphere, Zach will offer insights and perspectives on the week's topic. Over the four weeks, we'll investigate practical tools and techniques for the creation of monologue/story-telling scenes and scenarios where a performer is in dialogue with audience members. We will also discuss considerations around crafting individual scenes within the context of longer-form performance experiences and how to create cohesion in works that feature non-sequential or multi-linear action. Each workshop will include in-class and out-of-class writing exercises, and participants will have the option to share their work and receive feedback from classmates if they wish. A performance or writing background is not required, and these gatherings are open to anyone who wishes to work, play, and/or learn more about writing practices.

NOTE: This is a four-part series that will build cumulatively and participants will sign-up for the full series (all four dates) to participate.

$300 for full Series

Subsidized rates for those experiencing financial hardship: $200
