NEW YORK—The de Blasio administration today announced the appointment of the Cultural Affairs Advisory Commission – including the return of five members, the appointment of 16 new members and the addition of four honorary members. The Commission is comprised of appointees from a diverse array of cultural and artistic organizations and practices, and will advise Mayor de Blasio and Commissioner of Cultural Affairs Tom Finkelpearl on issues impacting NYC's cultural community. The Commission will be chaired by Susana Torruella Leval, Professor at Hunter College and Emerita Director of El Museo del Barrio, and Ben Rodriguez-Cubeñas, Program Director for the Rockefeller Brothers Fund's Pivotal Place program, will serve as Vice-Chair.

"The talented New Yorkers we've convened for this board represent a cross section of the most diverse and accomplished artists, administrators and advocates in this city. Under the leadership of Susana Torruella Leval, I'm confident the wisdom of this Commission will guide the Department of Cultural Affairs toward meaningful and sustained engagement with the city's cultural communities to bring the arts to New Yorkers in all five boroughs," said Mayor Bill de Blasio.

The Commission will guide the Department of Cultural Affairs in ensuring its programs reach New Yorkers in all five boroughs, and continue to strengthen and build upon the relationship between the City and NYC's cultural and arts institutions. The Commission will meet with the Department of Cultural Affairs to advise on initiatives such as promoting diversity among our arts and cultural institutions by ensuring New Yorkers from every background are represented in a broad range of leadership and advisory positions in cultural organizations; creating affordable housing and workspaces so that NYC can remain a viable home for emerging artists; developing partnerships with local arts and cultural institutions to provide greater access to more New Yorkers; and developing the City's first comprehensive cultural plan. The Commission will have its first meeting this winter.

As stated in the City Charter, the Commission is charged with formulating and recommending goals with regard to cultural activities and policy, fostering coordination among City, State and federal agencies and other organizations and institutions with respect to cultural activities, and compiling data and reports and submitting its findings to the Mayor and Commissioner of the Department of Cultural Affairs.

The First Deputy Mayor Anthony Shorris, Cultural Affairs Commissioner Tom Finkelpearl, and Parks Commissioner Mitchell Silver serve ex-officio. Historically, the Chair of the Cultural Institutions Group (CIG), a position held on a rotating basis by directors of City cultural organizations, and the head of one of the borough arts councils, serve as non-voting, honorary participants of the CAAC. These entities will be represented by Thelma Golden, Chair of the Cultural Institutions Group, and Hoong Yee Lee Krakauer, Executive Director of the Queens Arts Council, respectively. Arnold Lehman, Former Chair of the Cultural Institutions Group and Schools Chancellor Carmen Fariña, will also be joining them as non-voting, honorary participants. Per the City Charter, the 21 regular members of the Commission will serve on a staggered schedule.

"New York's cultural community is woven into the fabric of our neighborhoods and is central to what makes our city such a vital, vibrant place to live and visit," said Cultural Affairs Commissioner Tom Finkelpearl. "The members of the Advisory Commission reflect the diverse range of how residents experience the arts, and I look forward to working with this extraordinary group on making progress toward our goal of expanding access to the arts for every New Yorker, especially as we begin our work on developing New York's first comprehensive cultural plan."

"New York City's cultural community will be well served by these new appointees to the Cultural Affairs Advisory Board," said Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito. "These individuals represent the great talent and diversity of New York's arts and culture community, and will serve residents across the five boroughs by making New York friendlier and more accessible for the art and culture communities."

"I am honored by this appointment, and delighted to join Mayor de Blasio and Cultural Commissioner Tom Finkelpearl in supporting artists and highlighting the richness and diversity of the arts in New York City," said Chair of the Cultural Advisory Commission Susana Torruella Leval.

"I am honored to work alongside Susana Leval to help guide the work of the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs. This is such an exciting time for our City and for the nation. I look forward to making sure that culture remains a critical part of the key developments in our City and informs the national and international dialogue about culture and its role in cities" said Vice Chair, Ben Rodriguez-Cubeñas.

"Being a cultural capital is a key part of who we are as a city," said Manhattan Borough President Gale A. Brewer. "I look forward to working with this commission and the Department of Cultural Affairs to leverage our artistic, historic, and cultural wealth to enrich the lives of New Yorkers."

"Advancement of the arts is integral to the advancement of our society. The service of members of the Cultural Affairs Advisory Commission serve New York City well, especially with input from iconic Brooklynites like Candice Anderson, Steve Buscemi, Alan Fishman, Kemi Ilesanmi, Carmen Fariña, and Arnold Lehman. I applaud Mayor de Blasio for selecting a diverse array of artistic luminaries to take the lead on the Advisory Commission's work in developing New York City's first comprehensive cultural plan," said Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams.

Council Majority Leader Jimmy Van Bramer, Chair of the Committee on Cultural Affairs, said, "The diversity of Mayor de Blasio's appointments to the Cultural Affairs Advisory Commission is a representation of New York City's wide range of artists as well as a representation of an eclectic mix of people from cultural communities in all five boroughs. Together we will increase access to the arts and culture in all communities throughout New York City and ensure every New Yorker – young and old – is afforded the ability to experience world-class art that make our city the cultural capital of the world."

The following are new appointees to the Cultural Affairs Advisory Commission:
